

The Boeing Company designs, builds and supports products that provide critical defense and security capabilities for the U.S., its allies and international partners around the world.

Boeing complies with all U.S. Government regulations and policies pertaining to weapons and does not produce, distribute or support (i.e., maintain) biological or chemical weapons, incendiary weapons, landmines or non-detectable fragment weapons, or banned cluster munitions as defined by the U.S. Government or the 2008 Convention on Cluster Munitions. Additionally, Boeing does not manufacture nuclear payloads.

In 2023, less than 5% of our total company revenue was derived from weapons and less than 1% of our total company revenue was derived from programs that support nuclear components.

For more information about the principles around which we do business, click here.