Contents

List of tables and figures Preface Abbreviations		page xi
		xiii
		xv
1	The state	1
1.1	Introduction	1
1.2	Distinctions	9
1.3	Some possessive notions	33
1.4	Problems	41
2	The process	45
2.1	Sources	45
2.2	Grammaticalization	76
2.3	Targets	89
2.4	How to reconstruct schemas	96
2.5	Language-internal variation	104
2.6	Schemas and possessive notions	117
2.7	Further issues	134
3	On attributive possession	143
3.1	From source to target	144
3.2	Specification	156
3.3	On 'possessor ascension'	163
3.4	On inalienability	172
3.5	Attributive and predicative possession	183
3.6	Conclusions	186
4	From possession to aspect	187
4.1	Parallels	188
4.2	Specifying possession	190

x Contents

4.3	Patterns of shift	195
4.4	Existence, possession, location, and other domains	202
4.5	Conclusions	207
5	Evaluation	209
5.1	Alternative approaches	209
5.2	Event schemas	222
5.3	On categories and universals	224
5.4	On explanation	228
5.5	Conclusions	233
	Appendix: A world-wide survey of 'have'-constructions	240
	References	245
	Index of Authors	264
	Index of Languages	267
	Index of Subjects	270

Tables

<ol> <li>Definiteness vs. indefiniteness in 'have'- and 'belong'- constructions: Typical associations.</li> <li>Some prototypical properties of possessive notions.</li> <li>A formulaic description of schemas used for the expression of predicative possession.</li> <li>Source schemas for 'have'-constructions in 100 languages according to continents.</li> <li>Contrastive properties of source schemas for predicative possession.</li> <li>Typical correlations between source schemas and 'have'-and 'belong'-constructions.</li> <li>The main possessive constructions in Manding and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>The main stages in the development from location to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main constructions of predicative possession in Ewe and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.</li> <li>A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.</li> <li>The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ol>
<ol> <li>Some prototypical properties of possessive notions.</li> <li>A formulaic description of schemas used for the expression of predicative possession.</li> <li>Source schemas for 'have'-constructions in 100 languages according to continents.</li> <li>Contrastive properties of source schemas for predicative possession.</li> <li>Typical correlations between source schemas and 'have'-and 'belong'-constructions.</li> <li>The main possessive constructions in Manding and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>The main stages in the development from location to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main constructions of predicative possession in Ewe and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.</li> <li>A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.</li> <li>The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ol>
<ol> <li>A formulaic description of schemas used for the expression of predicative possession.</li> <li>Source schemas for 'have'-constructions in 100 languages according to continents.</li> <li>Contrastive properties of source schemas for predicative possession.</li> <li>Typical correlations between source schemas and 'have'-and 'belong'-constructions.</li> <li>The main possessive constructions in Manding and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>The main stages in the development from location to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main stages in the development from existence to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main constructions of predicative possession in Ewe and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.</li> <li>A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.</li> <li>The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ol>	30 of predicative possession.  2.2. Source schemas for 'have'-constructions in 100 languages according to continents.  2.3. Contrastive properties of source schemas for predicative possession.  2.4. Typical correlations between source schemas and 'have'-and 'belong'-constructions.  2.5. The main possessive constructions in Manding and the notions expressed by them.  2.6. The main stages in the development from location to possession in Ewe.  2.7. The main stages in the development from existence to possession in Ewe.  2.8. The main constructions of predicative possession in Ewe and the notions expressed by them.  2.9. Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.  3.1. A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.  3.2. The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.  5.1. Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.  5.2. Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen	39	, according to continents.  2.3. Contrastive properties of source schemas for predicative possession.  2.4. Typical correlations between source schemas and 'have'-and 'belong'-constructions.  2.5. The main possessive constructions in Manding and the notions expressed by them.  2.6. The main stages in the development from location to possession in Ewe.  2.7. The main stages in the development from existence to possession in Ewe.  2.8. The main constructions of predicative possession in Ewe and the notions expressed by them.  2.9. Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.  3.1. A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.  3.2. The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.  5.1. Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.  5.2. Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen	47	7
<ol> <li>Contrastive properties of source schemas for predicative possession.</li> <li>Typical correlations between source schemas and 'have'-and 'belong'-constructions.</li> <li>The main possessive constructions in Manding and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>The main stages in the development from location to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main stages in the development from existence to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main constructions of predicative possession in Ewe and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.</li> <li>A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.</li> <li>The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ol>	75	5
<ul> <li>Typical correlations between source schemas and 'have'-and 'belong'-constructions.</li> <li>The main possessive constructions in Manding and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>The main stages in the development from location to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main stages in the development from existence to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main constructions of predicative possession in Ewe and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.</li> <li>A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.</li> <li>The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ul>	91	į
<ol> <li>The main possessive constructions in Manding and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>The main stages in the development from location to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main stages in the development from existence to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main constructions of predicative possession in Ewe and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.</li> <li>A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.</li> <li>The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ol>	92	2
<ol> <li>The main stages in the development from location to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main stages in the development from existence to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main constructions of predicative possession in Ewe and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.</li> <li>A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.</li> <li>The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ol>	123	3
<ol> <li>The main stages in the development from existence to possession in Ewe.</li> <li>The main constructions of predicative possession in Ewe and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.</li> <li>A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.</li> <li>The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ol>	126	6
<ol> <li>The main constructions of predicative possession in Ewe and the notions expressed by them.</li> <li>Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.</li> <li>A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.</li> <li>The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ol>	128	₹
<ul> <li>Typical participant encoding in 'have'-constructions according to source schema.</li> <li>A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.</li> <li>The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ul>	133
according to source schema.  A formulaic description of source schemas used for the expression of attributive possession.  The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.  Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.  Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen	133	, expression of attributive possession.  3.2. The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.  5.1. Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.  5.2. Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen	135	5
<ul> <li>The distribution of inalienable and alienable nouns in Pima-Papago.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ul>	144	1
<ul> <li>5.1. Correspondences between event schemas and Locker's propositional types.</li> <li>5.2. Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen</li> </ul>	181	ı
5.2. Correspondences between event schemas and the classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen	210	) classifications proposed by Hengeveld (1992) and Stassen
(1005)	213	3
<ul><li>(1995).</li><li>5.3. Semantic relationships according to Casagrande and Hale (1967:167).</li></ul>	223	3

Figures

1.1.	A prototype characterization of possessive notions.	40
2.1.	The Overlap Model.	82
3.1.	A radial network of genitival meanings (based on Nikiforidou 1991).	156	