

Contents

List of Illustrations	xi
Preface	xiii
Introduction	i
PART ONE Traditional Conceptions of Music	47
CHAPTER ONE
Music as Harmony i): Music as Order and Form	51
The Greek tradition (51); Eighteenth-century developments of the traditional metaphor of harmony (58); Goethe's reception and development of the traditional concept of harmony (61); Goethe's Faust (64)
CHAPTER TWO
A Negative Metaphor of Harmony: Music as Disharmony, Discord, Dissonance	77
Disharmony, discord, dissonance (78); French and Italian thought: Disharmony as part of the cosmic order (85); Reception of these changes in German representations of disharmony within cosmic disorder (91); Schiller and Goethe (94)
CHAPTER THREE
A Negative Metaphor of Language: Music as Irrational, Music as Voice of Feeling	105
Plato and Aristotle (107); Eighteenth-century development of this inheritance (116); Effects of music on the body: French and Italian thought (119); Music can damage your health (12.1); Rationality restored - if possible (12.4); Music restored - as the voice of feeling (Rousseau and Herder) (150); Goethe's reception of these conceptual metaphors (136); Goethe's development of these metaphors in the Rousseau/Herder mode (140); Goethe's development of these metaphors beyond Rousseau and Herder (144); Goethe: Music and the undermining of thought and language (147)

CHAPTER FOUR

A Further Negative Metaphor of Language:

Music as Sub- and Superhuman, Music and the Daemonic 153

The perpetuation of these metaphors in Shakespeare (157); The reception and development of these metaphors in eighteenth-century Germany (159); Music as medium of metamorphosis and change (163); Music as manifestation of the daemonic: Goethe's development of this entailment (168); Daemons, demons and humans (172.)

Traditional Conceptions of Music, Reviewed 180

PART TWO Conceptions of the Structure of Music and Their Influence on Musical Metaphor 183

CHAPTER FIVE

Music as Based on Mathematical Relations 189

Signs as analogues (190); Mathematical ratios in the cosmos and in music (192); Harmonics, acoustics and measuring the world (196); Mathematics as a disadvantaged discourse in a harmony of Vorstellungsarten (2.03); Mathematics and mathematicians in the cosmos (2.10) Makarie and friends (212.); Goethe's Tonlehre (2.17)

CHAPTER SIX

Music as Based on Rhythm zzi

Rhythm, the body and dance: Descartes and Mattheson (226); Rhythm, metre and pitch variation (2.2.9); Herder and rhythmic sequence in life and art (230); Herder, Schiller and 'Maas' (233); Goethe: The rhythm of life and the dance of ideas (238); Rhythm as medium, theme and sequence for depiction of a way of living (244); Herder's 'schöne Folge' as structural principle in Wanderjahre and Faust (249); Rhythm and repetition as metaphors for ways of living: Faust (252)

PART THREE Conceptions of Music and Language: Renewed
Metaphorical Potential from Interactive Domains 265

CHAPTER SEVEN

Enhanced Communication i): Music and Language as Similar 277

Rousseau: Music, rhetoric and human utterance (2.78); Herder and the timbre of musical sound: 'Melodie des Herzens' (280); Music and language equated in melody, as expression of (middle class) feeling (184); Klopstock and Rousseau: Song as sonorous special utterance in literature (190); Goethe and amateur music-making (193); Goethe: Simple song and sophisticated writing (2.95); Goethe: Fresh impetus from Italy, song as 'Wechselrede' (304); Goethe: special utterance in an ambiguous medium (309)

CHAPTER EIGHT

Enhanced Communication ii): Music as Contrast and Complement to Language 313

Music as needing the help of language (314); Music as having qualities complementary to language (316); A range of Romantic views: Music as superior to language, music as other-worldly medium (310); Other Romantic views which connect with eighteenth-century thought: Music goes where language fears to tread (314); The origins of language and music as origins of articulated sound: Rousseau, Herder and Schiller (317); The development of a 'manifold language' for writing: i) Sound, silence and rhetoric (330); A 'manifold language': ii) Klopstock (333); A 'manifold language': iii) Music + language + dance = broadband communication (335); Goethe: Language, sound, silence - and sense (339); Goethe, 'manifold language': Living sense in living formulation (345); The perils of 'manifold language': Confusion, contradiction and signifying nothing (356); Music as element (359); Music as mediator between language and extremes of experience (362)

CHAPTER NINE

Music as Harmony ii) : Music as All-Encompassing Dynamic Whole 369

Leibniz and the structure of harmonious wholeness: Simultaneous and sequential connections (376); The living cosmos and its dynamic units: a chain of being and a non-Darwinian evolution (378); Shaftesbury's relocation of the human individual to the heart of the harmonious cosmos (384); Man as beholder, laudator and creator of cosmic harmony in Nature: The human voice becomes part of cosmic polyphony (386); Cosmic harmony and science (391); Cosmic harmony, science and the future of Man (39e)

CHAPTER TEN

Music as Harmony iii): Harmony as Sequence,
'Melodie [...] in ihrem weiten Inbegriff ' 403

Goethe's 'sequences' (408); Harmonious sequences and ideal endings:
i) Novelle (411); Harmonious sequences and ideal endings:
ii) Grablegung, Bergschluchten (416); Harmonious sequence and the end of metaphor (430)

Conclusion 443

Bibliography 473

Index 489

Index of Goethe's Works 509

Index of Herder's Works 513

Index of Schiller's Works 515