ROMA, A STAR IS BORN, Set for Top Honors at 23rd Satellite Awards

Los Angeles, CA, Jan. 3, 2019: The International Press Academy (IPA) today announced the winners for the 23rd Annual Satellite Awards to be held on Feb. 22, 2019.

Alfonso Cuarón's "Roma" from Netflix leads with four major wins. Set in 1971, the black-and-white look back at Cuarón's childhood has won Best Director, Best International Film (Mexico), Best Original Screenplay, and Best Film Editing. Bradley Cooper's directorial debut "A Star Is Born," headlined by Lady Gaga, picked up three major wins in the category of Best Picture, Musical or Comedy, as well as Cinematography, and Best Song for "The Shallow."

"In 2018 we had a surge of talented filmmakers, which makes it difficult to narrow the field," said IPA President Mirjana Van Blaricom. "Some of these films will become part of moviemaking history."

Major acting wins include Glenn Close for "The Wife" from Warner Bros as Best Actress in Motion Picture, Drama; and Olivia Colman for "The Favourite" from FOX Searchlight as Best Actress for Motion Picture, Comedy or Musical. Willem Dafoe's near picture-perfect casting in Julian Schnabel's "At Eternity's Gate" about the life of Vincent Van Gogh has been recognized with Best Actor in a Motion Picture, Drama; and Rami Malek, who soared as Freddie Mercury in Queen epic "Bohemian Rhapsody," won Best Actor in a Motion Picture, Comedy or Musical. Regina King ("If Beale Street Could Talk") and Richard Grant ("Can You Ever Forgive Me?") both won for supporting roles. Additionally, "Can You Ever Forgive Me?" topped the Best Adapted Screenplay category.

Annapurna Pictures' "If Beale Street Could Talk" won Best Motion Picture, Drama, and Spike Lee's "BlacKkKlansman" from Focus Features is Best Motion Picture, Independent.

Notable television award winners are Amy Adams for "Sharp Objects," Darren Criss for "The Assassination of Gianni Versace," Julia Roberts for "Homecoming," and Brendan Gleeson for "Mr. Mercedes" from showrunner David E. Kelley based on the novel by Stephen King. Winners in supporting roles are Sharon Stone in "Mosaic," and Hugo Weaving in "Patrick Melrose." Issa Rae in "Insecure" (HBO) and Bill Hader in "Barry" (HBO) both won in the category Series, Comedy or Musical.

A full list of the 23rd Annual Satellite Award winners follows, with Special Achievement Award recipients for 2018. Film awards span 23 categories, and Television is recognized in 13 categories. The Satellite presentation is scheduled for Friday, Feb. 22, 2019 in Los Angeles. See www.pressacademy.com for details.
