FOREWORD

Transparency and accountability are central to the World Bank's mission to end extreme poverty and promote shared prosperity on a livable planet. These principles play a pivotal role in our interactions with Borrowers, project-affected people, civil society, and the broader development community.

The Grievance Redress Service (GRS), now in its ninth year of operation, is a vital component of the World Bank's accountability system. It provides a direct, confidential channel for individuals and communities affected by a Bank-financed project to raise concerns about social and environmental impacts with senior management at the World Bank.

The GRS is an important complement to the World Bank's overall accountability system, which also includes project-level grievance mechanisms that are overseen by Borrowers, and independent bodies such as the Dispute Resolution Service, and the Inspection Panel. As evidenced by this report, the GRS is making a difference not only for the complainants, but on their broader communities. In many cases, the GRS has contributed to enhancing project quality and results.

The GRS has a positive track record in resolving cases in a sustainable manner. Complaints submitted to the GRS often raise issues that may indicate a larger systemic challenge or concern. In such cases, the process of finding solutions can lead to changes in project design and in the practices of the implementing agencies and institutions. The report outlines several cases where solutions led to better development outcomes, including in Viet Nam, Türkiye, and Pakistan.

The statistics for the 2023 fiscal year show active use of the GRS in all seven regions that the World Bank works in, reflecting the GRS's growing visibility. As in previous years, more than half the GRS cases involve land acquisition, resettlement, and/or compensation. Labor as well as occupational health and safety issues are also common. New analysis in this year's report examines cases in the context of fragility, conflict, and violence (FCV), where project implementation poses unique challenges.

Through an array of sample cases, the report illustrates the Bank's collaborative efforts with project-affected people and Borrowers to understand concerns, investigate conditions on the ground, and facilitate the timely resolution of issues. The GRS overview and the section focused on FCV highlight the meticulous attention given to safeguarding complainants' confidentiality and mitigating the potential risk of reprisals.

Lastly, I want to highlight the GRS's role in the continuous improvement of Bank operations by crafting systemic solutions, identifying trends and concerns in specific sectors and regions, and sharing their knowledge and expertise with colleagues around the world.

The GRS is an invaluable resource, and we expect its impact to continue to grow. I invite you to delve deeper and learn more about their work and share this report widely.

1. INTRODUCTION

The Grievance Redress Service (GRS) is an avenue for individuals and communities to submit complaints directly to the World Bank if they believe that a Bank-supported project has or is likely to have adverse effects on them, their community, or their environment.

Launched in 2015, the GRS is designed to ensure prompt review and resolution of grievances, with strong confidentiality protections. Led by World Bank senior management, it complements project-level grievance mechanisms and the World Bank's Accountability Mechanism.

This report provides an overview of cases, activities, key themes, and trends in the fiscal year ending on June 30, 2023 (FY23). The GRS received a record 538 complaints in FY23, of which 154 were deemed admissible.¹ This is up from 383 and 113, respectively, in FY22. A total of 146 cases were closed in FY23, including 75 carried over from previous years.

The complaints that were deemed inadmissible were found to be outside the GRS's mandate, as they did not relate to World Bank-financed projects or involved procurement issues or alleged fraud and corruption. Those were referred to the relevant World Bank units for follow-up.

The next section explains how the GRS works and how it fits into the World Bank's broader approach to accountability. Section 3 presents detailed data on complaints received and cases processed, disaggregated by region and Global Practice, and distinguishing between projects subject to the former World Bank safeguard policies vs. the comprehensive Environmental and Social Framework adopted in 2018. Section 4 examines key themes and emerging trends.

Section 5 provides examples of cases from the seven regions that the World Bank works in—Eastern and Southern Africa, Western and Central Africa, East Asia and the Pacific, Europe and Central Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean, the Middle East and North Africa, and South Asia—including the complaints received, how they were addressed, and the resolution.

Lastly, Section 6 describes the GRS team's ongoing outreach and communication efforts, including training Bank staff to understand the role of the GRS in addressing concerns of project-affected people; raising awareness of it with Borrowers and key stakeholders; referring complaints as appropriate; and collaborating with other multilateral finance institutions.

¹Another 12 complaints were still at the intake stage as of June 30, 2023.

The rapid growth in the volume of cases suggests that project-affected people are increasingly aware of the GRS and have found it useful for raising and resolving concerns. For World Bank staff, meanwhile, the cases processed by the GRS provide valuable insights to inform the design of new projects and ensure even better social and environmental outcomes.

2. GRS OVERVIEW

The GRS is a corporate-level mechanism at the World Bank for people to submit grievances if they believe a Bank-financed operation has or is likely to have adverse effects on them, their community, or their environment. It complements project-level grievance mechanisms, which are overseen by Borrowers, and the World Bank's independent Accountability Mechanism, which houses the Dispute Resolution Service and the Inspection Panel.

The GRS works collaboratively with World Bank project task teams, Borrowers, complainants, and other relevant stakeholders to resolve issues, aiming to deliver lasting and sustainable solutions. It also plays a key role in institutional learning and the continuous improvement of World Bank operations.

Key functions

The main function of the GRS is to resolve grievances. The GRS receives complaints directly, through its website, by email, through World Bank offices worldwide,² and through referrals from project task teams and other Bank staff. It then screens them to ensure they fall within its mandate.

To be deemed admissible, a complaint must relate to a World Bank-supported project that is under preparation or active, or has been closed for less than 15 months; be submitted by named individuals or communities affected by the project, or by their authorized representative; and involve an environmental or social impact—actual or anticipated—from the project.

In any given year, a large share of complaints will fall outside those parameters. Many complaints do not actually involve activities under a World Bank-financed project. Allegations of fraud and corruption, as well as operational, procurement, and most employment issues, are forwarded to the relevant World Bank units and/or task teams.³ Complaints about projects financed by the International Finance Corporation (IFC) and the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA) are referred to them.

Once a complaint has been deemed admissible, the GRS works collaboratively with World Bank task teams, Borrowers, communities, and other relevant stakeholders to investigate and resolve the issues raised. Section 4 delves deeper into common concerns and how they are addressed. A more in-depth explanation of how the GRS handles complaints is provided in Annex 1.

³Individual hiring, promotion, and contract termination issues are outside the scope of the GRS's mandate. However, systemic issues, including whether projects honors contractual commitments to recruit and hire local community members, are considered social issues and do fall within the GRS's mandate.

The GRS is also responsible for monitoring and reporting on the resolution of cases. It works with World Bank task teams to ensure that the solutions negotiated with complainants and Borrowers are implemented to the complainants' satisfaction, and reports monthly on the status of complaints to World Bank senior management. It also publishes a monthly log of active cases on both its internal and external websites.

Another key function of the GRS is to contribute to learning and capacity building within the World Bank. By drawing insights from cases and identifying systemic issues and trends, it helps to improve how new and existing projects handle environmental and social matters, thus contributing to better development outcomes (see Section 4). In addition, the GRS team provides training and support for World Bank staff to help them handle and resolve complaints more effectively. The interactions with project-affected people fostered by the GRS also enable World Bank management to be more aware of emerging environmental and social risks.

Lastly, the GRS engages in outreach and communications to raise awareness of the service, how complaints can be filed, and how cases are resolved. This includes training World Bank staff and engaging with other international financial institutions and other partners (see Section 6).

Confidentiality protocol

The GRS prioritizes privacy and confidentiality, which is essential to the integrity of the complaint handling process. The GRS team is committed to ensuring that project-affected people can submit complaints safely, and works carefully to protect them from potential risks of reprisal.

The GRS Procedure, revised in FY23 and published on the internal and external GRS websites, sets clear standards for privacy and confidentiality. In addition, the GRS has posted an updated Personal Data Privacy Notice on its websites explaining how complainants' data are processed, including any information by which they might be identified.

The GRS assesses the risk of reprisal or other harm from the outset and treats all complaints as confidential by default. If confidentiality might pose a challenge for case resolution—for instance, if it makes it difficult to assess damages or negotiate compensation—the GRS will discuss the options with the complainant to agree on a way forward. Information on complainants is only shared with Borrowers if complainants give their written consent to the GRS to disclose their information to third parties (e.g., contractors).

The GRS relies on other World Bank units to follow up with Borrowers on the issues raised in complaints, including cases that raise concerns of reprisal. All staff who receive information about complainants are advised of the need for privacy and confidentiality and of the need to comply with the World Bank's Personal Data Privacy Policy.

Organization and structure

The GRS sits under the Operations Policy and Country Services (OPCS) Vice-Presidency of the World Bank, which is also responsible for interpretation of the Environmental and Social Framework (ESF) and the World Bank’s safeguard policies. This means that the GRS is overseen and supported by senior management responsible for the World Bank environmental and social policies, separate from the World Bank task teams responsible for preparing and supporting projects.

The GRS serves as a centralized World Bank system for tracking and addressing complaints about environmental and social issues. As noted above, the GRS complements project-level grievance mechanisms and the World Bank’s independent Accountability Mechanism, which houses the Dispute Resolution Service and the Inspection Panel (see Figure 1).

Importantly, using the GRS does not preclude complainants from accessing any other available redress mechanism. Indeed, project-level grievance mechanisms (GMs) remain the primary tool to raise and address project-related concerns in World Bank-supported operations. The GRS does not replace those GMs, nor does it restrict access to World Bank accountability mechanisms, including the Inspection Panel, or to accountability mechanisms of other co-lenders.

In its effort to promote sound and sustainable solutions, the GRS seeks to build synergies with project-level GMs. In FY23, the GRS specifically examined the functionality of those mechanisms during the evaluation phase of all admissible complaints, to confirm whether project-affected people could actually access them and have their concerns addressed.

Project Grievance Mechanism	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Established and managed by the Borrower • Handles complaints raised by project-affected individuals and communities
Grievance Redress Service	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Provides a single entry point at the corporate level for project-affected people to voice grievances to World Bank senior management • Provides guidance and support to World Bank staff to resolve these complaints efficiently and effectively
Independent Accountability Mechanism	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Serves as an independent complaints mechanism for project-affected people and communities • Reports directly to the Board of Executive Directors

The GRS team found that complainants had often raised their concerns at the project level, informally or through formal grievance mechanisms. Some complaints were still pending with those project-level mechanisms. When consent to waive confidentiality is provided, the World Bank may ask Borrowers to register GRS cases with project GMs for proper follow-up on the issues raised. When, as part of a GRS case, weaknesses are identified in the project-level GM—particularly if the GRS has received multiple complaints about a project—the World Bank may work with the Borrower to improve the project-level mechanism.

The GRS also handled several complaints in FY23 involving projects co-financed by other international financial institutions, with complaints submitted as well to entities such as the Inspection Panel and the IFC's Compliance Advisor Ombudsman (CAO) office.

In some cases, the Inspection Panel chose not to register Requests for Inspection about matters raised in active GRS cases, as the Panel was not satisfied that World Bank management had been given a reasonable opportunity yet to respond to the allegations. This does not preclude the possibility of a future Request for Inspection related to those projects. In other cases, complainants opted to attempt a dispute resolution process overseen by the Accountability Mechanism, and the cases were placed in abeyance by the GRS until those processes are completed.

3. GRS STATISTICS

Complaints received

The GRS received 538 complaints in FY23, a 40 percent increase from FY22, continuing a steady upward trend since the creation of the GRS in 2015 (Figure 2), and bringing the cumulative number of complaints received from March 2015 to June 2023 to 1,979. The growing number of complaints is due to the increased awareness of the GRS among project-affected people and World Bank staff. Not all complaints received by the GRS become GRS cases. Complaints that do not fall under the GRS mandate, such as allegations of fraud and corruption, issues relating to procurement and operational concerns, are referred to World Bank task teams and other mechanisms in the World Bank for appropriate follow-up. In this way, the GRS serves as a conduit for affected people to reach the appropriate mechanisms and enables the World Bank’s follow up on a variety of complaints.

As discussed further in Section 6, the GRS team has conducted extensive training and outreach.

Note: FY15 data start in March 2015, when the GRS began operations.

Intake channels

Of the 538 complaints received in FY23, 61 percent (328) were submitted directly to the GRS, 24 percent were referred to the GRS by World Bank task teams, and the rest were forwarded from the World Bank’s Integrity Vice Presidency and other units. The ratios vary from year to year, but reflect growing awareness of the GRS both within the World Bank and among project-affected people.

Admissible vs. inadmissible complaints

As explained in Section 2, the GRS only handles complaints from project-affected individuals and communities, within specific parameters. As a result, and as shown in Figure 2, many complaints received—more than half, except in FY21—are deemed inadmissible.

In FY23, 154 complaints, or 29 percent of the total, were deemed admissible.⁴ This is the lowest share to date and slightly lower than in FY22, but it also represents a 36 percent year-over-year increase in the total number of admissible cases. Notably, likely due to World Bank staff’s knowledge of the Bank’s accountability system, referrals make up a large share of admissible complaints: 71 percent in FY23.

Of the 372 complaints that were deemed inadmissible in FY23, more than half related to bidding or procurement processes and were referred to the World Bank procurement team in the Operations Policy and Country Services Vice-Presidency (OPCS).

Some inadmissible complaints alleged impacts unrelated to World Bank-financed project activities, and others alleged fraud or corruption and were referred to the World Bank’s Integrity Vice Presidency. Most of the rest were inadmissible because they related to operational matters, or to projects that had been closed for more than 15 months, and five others, because the complainant remained anonymous.

Some complaints were deemed inadmissible on multiple grounds. Conversely, in several instances, the GRS opened cases to investigate issues that fell under its mandate and made referrals on the other aspects, or else alerted complainants that some issues were unrelated to World Bank projects.

Cases carried over from previous years

In addition to the 154 cases opened in FY23 due to new admissible complaints, another 96 cases were carried over from previous fiscal years. As a result, the GRS had a total of 250 active cases in FY23, of which 146 were resolved by June 30, 2023. The latter figure includes 71 cases opened and resolved within FY23.

⁴ As noted earlier, another 12 complaints were still at the intake stage as of June 30, 2023.

Applicable environmental and social policies

In 2016, the World Bank approved an Environmental and Social Framework (ESF),⁵ applicable to all projects initiated on or after October 1, 2018, with the objective of supporting green, resilient, and inclusive development by strengthening protections for people and the environment.

The ESF reflects important advances in areas such as labor, inclusion and non-discrimination, gender, climate change, biodiversity, community health and safety, and stakeholder engagement. It also applies increased oversight and resources to complex projects, promotes integrated environmental and social risk management, and makes it easier to adapt to changing conditions.

Given the long duration of World Bank-financed projects—typically five years or more, often with several years of preparation—a majority of the Bank’s portfolio is still covered by the former environmental and social policies, known as the “Safeguards Policies.” As shown in Figure 3, of the 154 admissible complaints received in FY23, only 10 percent involved projects under the ESF; 80 percent were subject to safeguard policies, and 10 percent were subject to Program for Results Financing (PforR) policies.

All World Bank projects are assessed upfront for environmental and social risks, and this determines the measures required to understand and address those risks proactively. As shown in Figure 4, of the 122 cases received in FY23 that are subject to safeguards policies, 54 percent involved projects in the highest-risk Category, A. Of the 16 cases subject to the ESF—which classifies projects as high, substantial, moderate, or low risk—44 percent involved projects in the “high” risk category.

Note: FI projects are those managed through financial intermediaries.

Cases by region

The geographic distribution of projects involved in complaints received by the GRS changes from year to year, but it increasingly reflects the World Bank’s global reach. While, as recently as FY20, three of the seven world regions that the World Bank works in had fewer than 10 admissible complaints each, in FY23, all seven were in the double digits, with East Asia and the Pacific accounting for the single largest share, 23 percent, followed by Western and Central Africa at 18 percent (Figure 5).

On a cumulative basis, the region with the largest share of admissible complaints received from March 2015 through June 2023 is South Asia, with more than 24 percent of the total (Figure 6). This reflects, in part, the region's large share of World Bank investment project finance, but also the early uptake of the GRS in the region. In FY16, 12 out of the 21 admissible complaints came from South Asia; in FY17, it was 23 out of 41. Over time, the regional distribution of cases has become more even.

Other factors that affect the geographic distribution of complaints include the complexity of the projects involved; country and local conditions; and the receipt of multiple admissible complaints about a single project (see, for example, the Egypt case study in Section 5).

Cases by Global Practice

The World Bank manages its operations through units responsible for general management, regions, and sectors—the latter organized under 18 Global Practices.⁶ In FY23, the single largest share of admissible complaints received by the GRS involved projects under the Water Global Practice: 52, or 34 percent of the total (Figure 7). This is up sharply, from just 10 admissible complaints in FY22. This reflects a large influx of complaints from a handful of projects, including one with at least 10 admissible complaints, and another with close to 20.

Note: Global Practices with no projects about which the GRS received complaints in FY23 are omitted from the graph.

The Urban, Resilience, and Land Global Practice had the second-largest share of admissible complaints in FY23: 42, or 27 percent. This is up from 30 in FY22, when this Global Practice had the largest share of admissible complaints. The Transport Global Practice ranked third in FY23, with 15 percent of admissible complaints, and Energy and Extractives was fourth, with 10 percent.

On a cumulative basis, the Transport and Urban, Resilience, and Land Global Practices together account for 51 percent of all admissible complaints received by the GRS in FY15–23 (Figure 8). This is not surprising, as projects in these Global Practices often involve major public works, land acquisition, resettlement, and construction activities with the potential for impacts on local people’s properties and livelihoods. The same can be true in water-related projects, with the added risk of leaks, flooding, and resulting damage. Several of the cases opened in FY23 involved the construction of sewerage infrastructure.

4. KEY THEMES AND EMERGING TRENDS

Land acquisition, resettlement, and compensation

As the data in the previous section show—particularly the disaggregation by Global Practice—by far the majority of cases handled by the GRS involve projects with large civil works. Such projects often require land acquisition and resettlement. Construction activities can also disrupt livelihoods or result in damage to surrounding properties and infrastructure.

World Bank policies require compensation for any such impacts, and standard procedures are built into each project to ensure that affected people and communities are compensated in a timely manner. This is the case even if affected people lack formal land title. Sometimes, however, there are disagreements between national authorities and project-affected people as to what constitutes adequate compensation or who is entitled to it. Unexpected damages may also occur.

In FY23, 58 percent of the admissible complaints received by the GRS (90) involved land acquisition, resettlement, and compensation matters—including four of the seven case examples presented in Section 5.

In Cameroon, for instance, people affected by an electricity transmission line project complained that their properties had been wrongly excluded from the land valuation and compensation process, the payouts were inadequate, and there was too little information about compensation packages.

The World Bank followed up with the Borrower, and an addendum was made to the project's Resettlement Action Plan to address these issues. The GRS's involvement also resulted in better coordination with project-affected people, which expedited payments for impacted persons. The stakeholder engagement process was improved, too, and a new round of public meetings was conducted to inform community members about the compensation process as well as the project-level grievance mechanism.

The resolution to each compensation case will depend on the specific circumstances, but the Cameroon case is fairly typical. It is common to reevaluate affected properties when gaps in compensation are identified; engage with stakeholders to ensure they fully understand what they are entitled to; and when relevant, source additional resettlement options for people to choose from.

In some cases, instead of property values, the complaints involve economic impacts from project activities, such as damage to property or lost income or crops. In the Lao PDR case described in Section 5, for instance, a hotel owner complained about expected damage to trees on her property as well as loss of income due to construction activities that would disturb guests. Design changes helped avoid some of the expected damage, but compensation was also provided.

In the Poland case described in Section 5, part of a property was acquired for a flood risk mitigation project. The owner subsequently realized that road access to the rest of the property would be cut off and filed a complaint with the World Bank. The task team worked with Polish Water Authorities to resolve the matter. After extensive negotiations that also involved local authorities, a compromise was reached in which the Borrower agreed to build a new access road and provide additional compensation.

When appropriate, if complainants agree, cases may be resolved through corrective actions instead of compensation. In the Egypt case described in Section 5 below, the contractor repaired damage allegedly caused by substandard work. In the Argentina case, the contractor in a road project implemented technical measures to prevent future damage. (In the latter, however, when additional work was offered as an alternative to payments for damage to crops and farmland, the complainants opted for monetary compensation.)

It is important to note that even if only one person files a complaint with the GRS, the resolution facilitated by the World Bank in collaboration with Borrowers may yield benefits for other community members as well. Once a problem has been identified, often it is solved for other people who are similarly affected. Efforts are also made to prevent problems from reoccurring.

Labor issues and occupational health & safety

Ten cases processed by the GRS in FY23 raised labor issues with contractors hired to construct civil works as part of World Bank-financed projects. Several complaints alleged that lack of adherence to occupational health and safety (OHS) guidelines had resulted in unsafe working conditions and accidents. Others raised concerns about the facilities provided to workers, including inadequate housing, unsanitary conditions, lack of on-site provision of lunch, and lack of transportation to and from the worksite.

In response, the World Bank worked with Borrowers to enhance monitoring of OHS compliance and have the contractors improve workplace facilities, provide safe transportation, and ensure that all workers are insured. In several cases, independent labor audits were conducted to assess the root causes of the issues raised and recommend corrective measures, which were then implemented.

Fifteen complaints alleged workplace harassment, including sexual harassment; hostile work environments; and/or reprisals against workers who raised concerns directly with contractors or project implementing units. In response, the World Bank supported Borrowers in ensuring that codes of conduct were adopted and enforced and that training on appropriate conduct was provided. Project-level grievance mechanisms were also strengthened.

In all cases involving sexual harassment, sexual exploitation, and/or abuse (SH/SEA), the GRS engages with World Bank gender-based violence focal points, who work with task teams to establish survivor-centered responses appropriate to the level of risk and support their implementation. The priority is to link survivors to support services available locally and identify solutions for verification and action that put their safety and confidentiality at the forefront.

One case, described in Section 5, alleged the use of child labor on a construction site in South Sudan. The works were suspended until the matter was resolved, training was provided to the people involved and to the community, and the children and their families were connected to an international NGO to help them return to school and access poverty alleviation measures.

Another complaint alleged that a foreign contractor was discriminating against local communities in its recruitment, in violation of requirements under the project's Environmental and Social Management Plan. The Bank worked to negotiate an action plan with the contractor, the complainants, and local authorities to ensure the equitable recruitment of local unskilled and semi-skilled workers, with a shortlisting committee that includes community representatives.

Notably, workplace issues generally did not occur in isolation: often there were several concerns about a single contractor, including OHS issues, workplace harassment, adverse impacts on local communities, and/or reprisals against complainants. The issues were addressed in an integrated way, which improved the contractors' overall environmental and social performance.

The ESF significantly strengthens labor protections by requiring a formal Labor Management Procedure for projects, including clear guidance on hiring, work conditions, OHS, grievance mechanisms, contractors, suppliers, and community workers. That said, as noted in Section 3, only 10 percent of complaints received by the GRS in FY23 involved investment projects under the ESF. Over time, as a higher percentage of World Bank Investment Project Finance is covered by the ESF, more workers will enjoy these enhanced protections.

Fragility, conflict, and violence contexts

As highlighted by the World Bank's Strategy for Fragility, Conflict, and Violence 2020-2025,⁷ by the end of this decade, two-thirds of the world's extreme poor are expected to live in countries in FCV situations. This makes it crucial for the Bank to remain engaged in these places, even if it needs to work through partners to implement and monitor projects.

In FY23, the Bank classified 17 countries as in conflict and 20 as affected by institutional or social fragility.⁸ Of the 538 complaints received by the GRS in FY23, 187 (35 percent) related to projects supported by the Bank in countries experiencing conflict or fragility. Of these, 32 complaints were deemed admissible (21 percent of new cases in FY23).

The GRS closed a total of 26 cases in FCV countries in FY23, including 14 that had been received in FY23, and 12 that had been carried over from the previous three fiscal years. Two case examples presented in Section 5 involve countries in conflict: Cameroon and South Sudan.

Many of the issues raised in these cases are similar to those in non-FCV contexts: impacts on livelihoods and on community assets, inadequate compensation, lack of disclosure of project information, failure to adhere to OHS standards, and failure to resolve complaints at the project level. There were also allegations of harassment, poor working conditions, and, as described in the South Sudan case in Section 5, child labor.

Several Bank-supported projects in FCV contexts generated clusters of similar complaints between FY20 and FY23. They involved lack of information about the projects and compensation; non-payment of compensation; damage to properties, community assets, and sacred sites; and environmental impacts without consultation with affected communities.

A common factor in cases in FCV contexts was complainants' concerns about risks to their physical security and/or fear of retaliation, as well as difficulties in accessing project-grievance mechanisms—for security reasons, due to lack of awareness, or because the mechanisms were not functioning well or had not yet been established.

Insufficient supervision by Borrowers also resulted in lack of adherence to projects' environmental and social management plans. Inadequate monitoring of suppliers was another common problem, which increased the risks of child labor and of safety issues in community infrastructure.

The World Bank facilitated an array of measures to correct these issues, including compensation to affected persons, repair work, additional training for contractors and project implementing agencies for partners overseeing projects on behalf of the World Bank, community meetings to share information, arrangements for third-party monitoring, site security plans, and time-bound action plans to address systemic issues. Great care was also taken to protect complainants' confidentiality and prevent retaliation.

A majority of the projects in FCV contexts that were the subject of complaints were in early stages of implementation, and delays in hiring and making institutional arrangements contributed to the problems that arose. Some of the GRS cases brought larger issues to the World Bank's attention that required coordination with the Borrowers to ensure that appropriate resources were in place to ensure effective project implementation.

Some of the resulting solutions included project restructuring to provide more resources for environmental and social commitments; recruitment of skilled staff, backed by a reliable process for monitoring and reporting; establishment of platforms to enable communities to receive regular updates about projects; and commissioning independent audits to identify and address problems.

Systemic solutions for better development outcomes

Complaints submitted to the GRS often raise issues that may indicate a larger systemic challenge or concern. In such cases, the process of finding solutions can lead to changes in project design and in the practices of the implementing agencies and institutions that contribute to more sustainable project outcomes overall.

For example, the GRS received multiple complaints related to land acquisition, resettlement, and compensation across the portfolio of World Bank-financed projects in Viet Nam—including 39 within a six-month period in 2022. In response, the Bank worked with the Borrower to pause land acquisition processes to assess and address the underlying causes of complaints.

The World Bank reviewed all the compensation packages in several projects in Viet Nam, identifying systemic gaps. This resulted in additional compensation to many project-affected people, not just the original complainants. Project designs were also reviewed, and the project footprints and associated land acquisition needs were reduced, so that fewer people were affected. Finally, the World Bank helped the Borrower to enhance their capacity for stakeholder engagement.

In Türkiye, where the World Bank had provided emergency financing to Turkish banks to support small and mid-size enterprises (SMEs) affected by the COVID-19 lockdown and economic downturn, a business owner filed a complaint with the GRS. Among the concerns raised were that loan information was difficult to access, and that a branch supervisor had treated her with hostility.

The World Bank task team worked with the financial intermediary (FI) implementing the project, and several training sessions were offered on transparent and accountable processes. The FI's practices were improved at all bank branches dealing with customers, resulting in greater transparency, more accessible information, and the treatment of customers with dignity and respect.

In Pakistan, the World Bank is financing several projects in Karachi, which is growing so fast in both population and footprint that municipal services cannot keep up with demand. The city is unable to equitably meet the basic needs of residents and local businesses, with major gaps in water, sewage, and waste management services, for instance. Against this backdrop, in 2018, the government initiated a series of anti-encroachment drives.

No World Bank-financed projects are in the areas where the anti-encroachment drives have occurred, but the GRS has nonetheless received at least 22 complaints about the issue. In response, the World Bank engaged with the Borrower to encourage the development of a citywide framework for resettlement and rehabilitation that is in line with international standards. If successful, this effort could enable Karachi to achieve its objectives in a more equitable and sustainable manner, and also reduce the risk of future disputes and conflicts.

5. CASE EXAMPLES BY REGION

Africa: Eastern and Southern

South Sudan: Enhancing Community Resilience and Local Governance Project (P169949)

Complaint

A complainant alleged that a contractor was using child labor for construction activities; was failing to abide by the project's occupational health, safety, security, and environment standards; and was performing substandard work.

Resolution

The World Bank coordinated with the agency implementing the project on behalf of the Borrower to conduct an immediate site visit, and project works were temporarily suspended.

The World Bank conducted separate inspections that confirmed a supplier's use of child labor and the contractor's non-adherence to the Bank's Environmental & Social Framework (ESS2 on labor and working conditions) and requirements of the Environmental and Social Management Plan (ESMP).

At the request of the Bank, the project implementing agency issued a warning to the contractor and trained the supplier's and contractor's staff and the community to halt the use of child labor. To ensure the well-being of the children who had worked on the site, the project implementing agency coordinated with an international NGO to enable them to benefit from existing schooling and cash transfer programs operated by the NGO.

The project also hired an independent firm to assess the safety of structures built in the community by the contractor, such as a market, health centers, and schools. Corrective measures were taken by supervising engineer, including a long-term maintenance plan agreed with the Government.

Before lifting the works suspension, the project implementing agency prepared a corrective action plan that included training of the contractor; establishment of a grievance mechanism for workers; and ESMP monitoring once the works resumed. Subsequent missions by World Bank staff confirmed that the project had fully implemented the action plan between September and December 2022. The complainant expressed satisfaction with the actions taken and has not reported any further concerns.

Along with resolving the complainant's concerns, this case enhanced the project implementing agency's staff knowledge of the World Bank's ESF, which is important because the agency is a key partner implementing Bank-financed operations in contexts of fragility, conflict, and violence. In addition, the case enhanced community members' awareness of different aspects of World Bank standards for community work and of these workers' contribution to development projects, occupational health and safety, and other safety issues.

Africa: Western and Central

Cameroon: Electricity Transmission and Reform Project (P152755)

Complaints

Five complaints from individuals and community representatives involving the exclusion of properties from the land valuation and compensation process, low compensation, and lack of information about compensation packages.

Resolution

The World Bank followed up with the Borrower's Ministry of Energy and implementing agency, the project implementing agency. In coordination with the Bank, they undertook several actions to address issues raised in the complaints and to ensure that more generally, compensation commitments under the project were fulfilled.

In particular, they conducted a new census and revaluation of all properties located along the Bank-supported transmission line, which led to the inclusion of previously omitted properties in an addendum to the project's Resettlement Action Plan. They also conducted a new round of public meetings to inform community members about the project-level grievance mechanism and the compensation amounts and schedules in divisions where project work had not yet begun.

In addition, full compensation was immediately paid out to project-affected persons, including complainants living in districts where work was about to begin. The complainants confirmed that they had been paid, and the Bank also verified that implementing agency was in regular communication with other community members as it prepared their compensation payments.

Along with resolving the specific complaints, the GRS's involvement helped the Government and implementing agency to set up an effective stakeholder engagement process and improved coordination between project-interested parties and national government agencies, expediting the compensation process. The payments, in turn, helped affected people to obtain land tenure and land use rights in the places where they were relocated, and resume their income generation activities there.

Development Objective: To improve the capacity, efficiency, and reliability of Cameroon's national electricity transmission network.

Lao PDR: Southeast Asia Disaster Risk Management Project (P160930)

Complaint

The owner of a riverside hotel filed a complaint alleging that planned construction as part of the Project would likely damage her property and trees. She also anticipated having fewer guests during construction, particularly due to the noise and dust, and requested compensation for the associated loss of business income.

Resolution

At the World Bank's request, the Borrower conducted additional consultations with the complainant, with the participation of the local grievance committee and village authorities. This resulted in a change in the project's technical design to shift some of the planned construction work to the opposite riverbank, minimizing the impacts of construction noise and dust on her property and business.

Subsequently, the Borrower and the complainant agreed on compensation for a limited number of trees that were still affected despite the change in project design. After the payment, the complainant confirmed that all concerns had been addressed.

Development Objective: To reduce the impacts of flooding in target areas and enhance the Government's capacity to provide hydro-meteorological services and disaster response.

Poland: Odra–Vistula Flood Management Project (P147460)

Complaint

Concerns around lack of access to an existing road and associated adverse impacts on livelihood activities, due to the project's acquisition of part of the complainant's property.

Resolution

The World Bank task team worked with Polish Water Authorities, who were in charge of project implementation, to explore different options for restoring the complainant's road access. This required several rounds of consultations with the complainant, community members, and the local municipality. The options were reviewed for technical feasibility, and the terms of the compensation provided to the complainant were reexamined.

The World Bank task team was actively engaged throughout the process and provided feedback and guidance to encourage an amicable solution. The Borrower and the complainant were ultimately able to reach a compromise, which involved building an access road and providing additional compensation. This resolution was well received by the complainant and local village residents.

The Borrower also amended the project's Resettlement Action Plan to ensure that these changes were accurately reflected in the project documents. The complainant requested that some of the agreements related to compensation be kept confidential, and the Borrower and the Bank honored this by redacting personally identifying information.

Development Objectives: To increase access to flood protection for people living in selected areas of the Odra River and the Upper Vistula River basins and to strengthen the institutional capacity of the Borrower to mitigate the impact of floods more effectively.

Argentina: Northwestern Road Development Corridor Project (P163115)

Complaint

The GRS received a complaint alleging that poorly planned and unfinished road and drainage system construction as part of the Project had resulted in flood damage to the complainants' farmland and crops, for which they sought compensation.

Resolution

An independent technical expert was hired to assess this case and concluded that the construction works financed by the Project had contributed to the floods that damaged the complainants' property. The expert also recommended technical solutions to prevent the recurrence of such damages. The Borrower and the complainants agreed to follow that recommendation, and the work was completed ahead of the start of the following rainy season.

Subsequently, an independent economic appraisal determined the value of the damage to the farmland and crops. The parties discussed the option of doing additional preventive work equivalent to the value of the damages, but ultimately the Borrower and the complainants agreed to monetary compensation instead. After the payments were made, the complainants expressed their appreciation for the outcome to the World Bank.

Development Objective: To improve connectivity and road safety along targeted road sections of the Northwestern Corridor and to support corridor development in the Northwest of Argentina.

Arab Republic of Egypt: Sustainable Rural Sanitation Services Program for Results (P154112)

Complaints

Ten separate complaints from workers and affected communities living in three governorates covered by this Program. They alleged that low-quality civil works were damaging properties and degrading local roads; raised concerns about potential health risks due to wastewater overflow from broken pipes contaminating water supplies; and said the contractors were not adhering to occupational health standards.

Resolution

The World Bank followed up with Egypt's Ministry of Housing, Utilities, and Urban Communities (MHUUC) and the Water Company, which oversaw the implementation of subprojects involved in the complaints. The Water Company's local coordination units in the three governorates inspected the project sites as well as local roads and the complainants' properties. They also consulted with affected communities and workers and came up with several corrective measures.

The wastewater overflow was found to be due to the degradation of the existing sewer network, which the Program intends to replace. In the interim, at the request of governorate authorities and the Water Company, the contractors worked immediately to repair broken pipes and affected houses, restore community roads, and clean up accumulated waste and debris in residential areas. The complainants expressed satisfaction with this outcome.

With respect to the occupational health and safety (OHS) complaints, the Water Company assigned independent experts to inspect the works and the contractors' operations manuals. They found that the contractors had full insurance coverage for the workers and took several steps to address other OHS concerns, arranging with the contractors to regularize working hours into shifts, add safety equipment, and create a dedicated team to supervise and report on worker incidents or grievances.

Along with protecting communities' health and safety and correcting environmental problems, this case contributed to improving outcomes in the Program by enhancing the Water Company's and local governorates' capacities to implement and monitor projects, manage social and environmental impacts, and engage with local stakeholders.

Development Objective: To strengthen institutions and policies for increasing access and improving rural sanitation services in selected governorates.

India: Jhelum and Tawi Flood Recovery Project (P154990)

Complaint

Safety concerns at a school due to the inadequacy of a retaining wall and increased landslide risks during construction.

Resolution

The World Bank's task team alerted the Borrower's Project Management Unit (PMU), which looked at the site and found a potential risk to the schoolchildren's safety, particularly because the main school building was at the foot of a slope where construction was occurring.

The PMU followed up with the contractor, who responded that it was tasked only with building new school classrooms at the higher elevation, and it was not responsible for any damage to the retaining wall protecting the main structure.

The project supervising engineers working for the Borrower determined that the wall, which was old and cracked, could not adequately protect the school building from landslides or mudslides, and the ongoing construction increased those risks. Recognizing the dangerous situation, the Borrower urgently requested that project funds be reallocated to pay to repair and reinforce the protection barrier.

The work has been completed, supervised by the PMU and technical staff, who visited the site. The complainant was satisfied with the resolution. The GRS case, which was opened in FY22, was closed in FY23.

Development Objective: To support recovery and increase disaster resilience in project areas and increase the capacity of the project implementing entity to respond promptly and effectively to an eligible crisis or emergency.

6. COMMUNICATION AND OUTREACH

Staff training

The GRS conducted trainings for World Bank staff on GRS processes, how the GRS works with task teams, and what staff members should do if they receive a complaint. Particular attention is paid to issues of confidentiality. The trainings also present cases and lessons learned from cases in each region, providing another opportunity for the insights presented in Section 4 to inform ongoing and future work by World Bank teams worldwide.

Cooperation with other multilateral finance institutions

During FY23, the GRS worked closely with other multilateral organizations that are setting up or consolidating their management-led grievance mechanisms, to disseminate experiences and knowledge on grievance redress. This was done through a series of information sessions, as well as at a two-day workshop with partner organizations in the Inter-American Development Bank (IADB), the International Finance Corporation (IFC), and the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA) about best practices in management-led grievance redress mechanisms. In FY24, the GRS has continued these efforts with additional multilateral organizations.

In addition, in May 2023, the World Bank presented on the GRS and management-led grievance mechanisms at the Multilateral Financial Institutions Working Group on Environmental and Social Standards meeting in Thessaloniki, Greece. Participants included representatives from the IFC and MIGA, as well as the African Development Bank (AfDB), Agence Française de Développement (AFD), Asian Development Bank (ADB), Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB), Black Sea Trade and Development Bank (BSTDB), Caribbean Development Bank (CDB), Eurasian Development Bank (EDB), European Bank of Reconstruction and Development (EBRD), European Investment Bank (EIB), Inter-American Development Bank (IADB), International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD), United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), Nordic Development Fund (NDB), Nordic Environment Finance Corporation (NEFCO), and Nordic Investment Bank (NIB), among others. Following on this, EBRD and IFAD have requested deeper engagement with the GRS and to be invited to the next meeting of World Bank, IFC, MIGA, and IADB where management-led grievance mechanisms are discussed.

GRS websites

The GRS websites play a crucial role in raising awareness of this grievance mechanism among project-affected communities and World Bank stakeholders globally. The external website provides overviews of the GRS—as a web page, in a simplified video, and in a printable brochure—as well as case logs that are updated monthly, annual reports, and other GRS-related documents. Project-affected persons can also submit complaints directly through the website, on a form available in six languages.

In FY23, the GRS external website had a record 19,000 page views—up 30 percent from the site traffic in FY22. Downloads of key documents from the site also increased significantly. For example, the GRS case log was downloaded more than 500 times in FY23, a 40 percent increase from FY22. The GRS complaint form was downloaded 285 times, also up 40 percent from FY22.

These increases in traffic and downloads are the result of small adjustments to the site to make it easier to find on the World Bank website and through search engines, but also reflect a growing user familiarity with all the resources that the GRS site offers.

Annex I: GRS Complaint Handling Cycle

The GRS seeks to handle complaints promptly and collaboratively, while keeping complainants updated throughout the complaint-handling cycle. The GRS process for handling complaints is set out in the World Bank's GRS Directive and GRS Procedure.⁹ The latter was updated in 2023 to reflect additional knowledge gained through processing of cases.

The complaint handling process consists of five phases: (i) intake and receipt of complaints; (ii) evaluation and review of the issues raised; (iii) solution-seeking and reaching agreement on the way forward; (iv) monitoring implementation of the identified solution; and (v) process conclusion with case closure. Figure A1 illustrates the process of receiving and processing complaints.

Intake of complaints

Complaints can be submitted to the GRS directly by project-affected individuals, communities, and their designated representatives, or be referred to the GRS by World Bank staff. Direct complaints may be submitted through a complaint form available on the GRS website, which is available in six languages, or emailed to a dedicated service account, grievances@worldbank.org. Complaints can also be submitted by mailing a complaint letter to any World Bank country office or to the World Bank headquarters in Washington, D.C.

When World Bank staff receive a complaint alleging harm to people or the environment in relation to a World Bank-supported project, they are required to promptly notify the GRS and refer the complaint within 10 business days of receipt, in accordance with the Bank Procedure. This referral process helps ensure that all complaints from project-affected people, regardless of how they are received, are assessed and tracked appropriately.

All complaints received by the GRS, either directly or via referral, are recorded in the GRS case management system and undergo a preliminary intake assessment. Some complaints are deemed inadmissible at this stage because they are anonymous, frivolous in nature, or outside the mandate of the GRS. Complaints regarding matters already assessed by the GRS are also deemed inadmissible in the absence of new facts or compelling evidence to revisit the complaint.

Many complaints that fall outside the GRS mandate are referred to other World Bank units. For example, complaints related to fraud and corruption are referred to the Integrity Vice Presidency (INT), and complaints related to bidding and procurement processes are referred to the procurement unit in the Operations Policy and Country Services Vice-Presidency (OPCS).

The GRS also does not handle issues pertaining to employment or the pursuit of employment with the World Bank, or complaints about projects financed by the International Finance Corporation (IFC) or the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA).

Complaint evaluation

There are three criteria that must be met for a complaint to be considered admissible for further processing by the GRS:

- It relates to a World Bank-supported project that is under preparation, is active, or has been closed for less than 15 months.
- It was submitted by individuals or communities affected by the World Bank-supported project (or their authorized representative).
- It alleges that the complainants have been or will be affected by the World Bank-supported project.

Each complaint is carefully evaluated to determine whether it raises environmental and/or social concerns that fall within the GRS mandate. This assessment may include a review of relevant project information and documentation, a request for further information from the complainant or relevant World Bank task team, and meetings with the World Bank management and staff responsible for supervising the project. At the conclusion of the evaluation phase, the GRS determines whether the complaint is admissible or inadmissible and identifies potential next steps.

In evaluating each complaint, the GRS forms an independent and reasoned view regarding the issues raised. The GRS also examines the potential for collaborative resolution of the issues raised and initiates the solution-seeking process accordingly.

Seeking solutions

The GRS collaborates with World Bank task teams to resolve complaints that have been deemed admissible. Depending on the nature of the issues raised, various approaches can be used in resolving grievances, such as through:

Ensuring dissemination of information: The GRS helps ensure that the complainants have access to relevant information about the project, its risks and impacts, and related mitigation measures.

Promoting fact finding: The GRS supports a fact-finding process on the issues raised in the complaint. The GRS facilitates exchanges with complainants and World Bank task teams and any requests for additional information, and Bank teams in turn work with the Borrower to better understand and address the concerns related to the complaint.

Facilitating dialogue and negotiation: Together with World Bank task teams and relevant Bank units, the GRS facilitates dialogue between complainants and the Borrower with the objective of arriving at an effective and sustainable solution through negotiation and agreement.

Establishing a mediation process: When a dispute between the parties may benefit from mediation or dispute resolution, the GRS establishes a process for engaging qualified experts who can help achieve mutually agreeable solutions to the concerns raised.

Monitoring and closing cases

A case is typically closed when a complainant agrees to the actions proposed to address the complaint, and those actions are implemented satisfactorily. The GRS monitors implementation of the agreed actions and closes the case only when the necessary actions have been completed. Documentation or other means of verification are required. If actions are not carried out as agreed, the GRS engages with the parties involved until further progress toward resolution of the concerns is no longer possible.

A case may also be closed when a complaint cannot be resolved through the process outlined in the GRS Procedure,¹⁰ in which case the GRS informs the complainant of the reasons for closing the case.

Confidentiality

The GRS is committed to respecting the privacy and confidentiality of complainants in case management and personal data handling. Under its confidentiality protocol, the GRS treats all complaints as confidential, unless complainants provide consent to the disclosure of their personal data to the Borrower or relevant third parties (e.g. contractors). This means the GRS will not share the complainants' identity or identifiable information with any external person without the complainants' written authorization. The GRS personal data privacy notice is published on the GRS website and shared with complainants upon receipt of new complaints.

¹⁰In particular, the GRS Procedure allows for cases to be closed when all reasonable efforts to reach an agreement have been exhausted; the World Bank's due diligence verifies that the issues raised have been handled in accordance with applicable environmental and social requirements; and/or the complaint-specific issues have been addressed (broader issues may continue to be followed up by the task team). Cases may also be closed when the complainants' lack of response impedes further case processing.
