

HAL
open science

Himyar

Jérémie Schiettecatte

► To cite this version:

Jérémie Schiettecatte. Himyar. Roger S. Bagnall; Kai Brodersen; Craige B. Champion; Andrew Erskine; Sabine R. Huebner. The Encyclopedia of Ancient History, John Wiley & Sons, 2017, 9781444338386. 10.1002/9781444338386.wbeah30219 . halshs-01585072

HAL Id: halshs-01585072

<https://shs.hal.science/halshs-01585072v1>

Submitted on 11 Sep 2017

HAL is a multi-disciplinary open access archive for the deposit and dissemination of scientific research documents, whether they are published or not. The documents may come from teaching and research institutions in France or abroad, or from public or private research centers.

L'archive ouverte pluridisciplinaire HAL, est destinée au dépôt et à la diffusion de documents scientifiques de niveau recherche, publiés ou non, émanant des établissements d'enseignement et de recherche français ou étrangers, des laboratoires publics ou privés.

Distributed under a Creative Commons Attribution - NonCommercial - NoDerivatives 4.0 International License

Ḥimyar

JÉRÉMIE SCHIETTECATTE

Ḥimyar was the geographic area stretching over the southern highlands of Yemen and also the name of the tribal confederacy settled here.

After having seceded from the kingdom of Qatabān, this tribal confederacy assumed its independence: Ḥimyar adopted its own era (Raydānite era), starting in 110 BCE; it was then headed by the kings of dhū-Raydān, after the name of their lineage. The first known one, Shammār dhū-Raydān, is mentioned in south-Arabic inscriptions in the mid-first century BCE.

According to classical sources, Ṣafār was the capital of the Ḥimyarites (Lat.: Homeritae) (Plin. HN 6.26.104; Peripl. Mar. Erythr. 22), a town spread over 110 ha where the royal palace Raydān was built (Figure 1). The other major cities of the Ḥimyarite confederation were significant tribal centres: Sami'an (today Maṣna'at Mariya) (tribe of Muhaqra); Hakir (tribe of Maytam); Baynūn (tribe of Shaddad); Yakla' (now Nakhlāt al-Ḥamrā') (tribe of Dhamārī); Jabal al-'Awd (tribe of Dhubhan); Sawā (tribe of Ma'afīr); Wa'lan (now al-Mi'sāl) (tribe of Radmān); Hidū (today al-Hadīm) (tribe of Khawlān); Ḥaṣī (the Madhā).

The Ḥimyarite economy depended on the aromatics trade through the ports of Makhawān (today al-Makhā') and Aden, and on efficient agriculture resulting from the building of ambitious hydraulic structures including monumental dams.

Ḥimyar, unlike the other south-Arabian kingdoms, was not characterized by a tribal pantheon dominated by a tutelary deity. Its people worshiped most of the south-Arabian deities (Wadd, 'Athtar, 'Amm, Almaqah, etc.). During his reign, Abikarib As'ad (before 384 to after 433 CE) embraced a monotheistic creed influenced by Judaism. This was also adopted by the tribal aristocracy behind him and by other people, shown by the rapid abandonment of the pagan temples.

From the first century BCE, Ḥimyar appeared as a competing power to the weakened kingdom of Saba'. In the early Christian era, the rulers claimed their legitimacy over the throne of Saba' by adopting the title of "king of Saba' and dhū-Raydān," and Sabaic as the official language, and by making offerings to the Sabean tutelary deity Almaqah, in the Awwam temple in Marib. When the Sabean aristocracy broke free from the Ḥimyarites and restored the Sabean kingdom in the early second century CE, both powers entered a 200-year-long period of rivalry and conflict which ended with the final annexation of Saba'. After having unified the whole of South Arabia, Ḥimyar started to stretch its dominion over the Hijaz and the Najd under the rule of Abikarib As'ad, subjugating the main tribe in Central Arabia, Ma'add (Procop. HW 1.19.14), and granting its government to its vassals, the princes of the tribe of Kinda.

In the early sixth century, the two Ḥimyarite kings Marthad'ilan Yanuf (ca. 500– 515) and Ma'dikarib Ya'fur (ca. 515– 522) became subjects of the Aksumite Negus and adopted Christianity. This belief spread in particular to the outskirts of the kingdom (Najrān, Tihāma, Socotra). The accession of Yusuf As'ar to the throne in 522 CE put an end to this subjugation. Communities of Christian converts supported by Aksum came into conflict with the Ḥimyarite ruler, resulting in the slaughter of Christians and an Ethiopian military intervention (Cosmas Christian Topogr. 2.140– 1), with Aksum seizing control of Ḥimyar for the next fifty years. The Ḥimyarite crown was assumed by the Negus officer, Abraha (ca. 530– 560), whose great deeds have left their imprint on both pre-Islamic and Islamic sources: the restoration of the great dam of Marib; the building of the church of Sana'a; the submission of all the tribes of Central and North Arabia, Ma'add, Hagar-and-Khatt, Tayyi', Yathrib, and Guzam. But above all, it was the Expedition of the Elephant carried out by Abraha against Mecca that made the deepest impression on his contemporaries and which is possibly echoed in the Qur'ān (sura of the Elephant).

In around 575 CE, Ḥimyar was conquered by the Persians under the rule of king Khusraw, and its importance diminished.

REFERENCES AND SUGGESTED READINGS

GAJDA, I. (2009) Le royaume de Ḥimyar à l'époque monothéiste. Paris.

ROBIN, C. J. (2004) "Ḥimyar et Israël." Compte rendus des séances de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres 148, 2: 831–908.

YULE, P. (2007) Himyar. Spätantike im Yemen. Late Antique Yemen. Aichwald.
YULE, P. (2013) Late antique Arabia: Zafār, capital of Himyar. Wiesbaden.

CAPTION

Figure 1 Bas-relief of a crowned figure (z607) from the Himyarite capital Zafār, ca. fifth century CE. High-resolution 3D scan (Credit: J. Lindenbeck, Heidelberg University Expedition, 2010).

CITATION

The Encyclopedia of Ancient History. Edited by Roger S. Bagnall, Kai Brodersen, Craige B. Champion, Andrew Erskine, and Sabine R. Huebner.

© 2017 John Wiley & Sons Ltd. Published 2017 by John Wiley & Sons Ltd.

DOI: 10.1002/9781444338386.wbeah30219