

Contents

Acknowledgments	9
Introduction	11
a. The object of study	12
b. Why Kant?	14
c. Immediate problems in using Kant	17
d. The method	17
e. The relationship to other research	21
1. Ethical problems and normative positions	25
1.1 The foetus and the woman	26
1.2 Foetal tissue and life-giving capacity	28
1.3 Women, children and reproductive technologies	40
1.4 Embryos—potential for full-grown human life and for research ..	47
1.5 Genetic intervention in human life	52
1.6 Genetic intervention in animal life	62
1.7 Conclusion	64
2. Arguments from utility and rights	66
2.1 Arguments from utility	66
2.2 Arguments from rights	79
3. Kant's ethical principles and duties	90
3.1 Kantian ethics in three parts	90
3.2 The human being with moral authority	93
3.3 The moral imperative at the maxim level	96
3.4 Duties for human beings in general	112
3.5 Some critical remarks	121
4. Experience and moral competence	124
4.1 Teleology and reflective judgment	124
4.2 Determinant and reflective ethical judgment	130
4.3 The perspective of care as a moral competence	137
4.4 The identity of the moral self	142
4.5 To master the relationship between humanity and nature	146
4.6 An articulation of our moral situation	150

5. Kantian ethics applied in the area of biomedicine157
5.1 Human enough to be protected158
5.2 To take care of the less than perfect170
5.3 Children—but not by all means178
5.4 Genetic remedies for human diseases187
5.5 To master the relationship between humankind and nature194
Conclusion199
Bibliography201
Index208