

Table of contents

Introduction	1
Ragnar Arntzen, Gisela Håkansson, Arnstein Hjelde and Jörg-U. Keßler
Part I. Teachability and learnability
CHAPTER 1
Research timeline. The role of instruction: Teachability and processability	9
Kristof Baten and Jörg-U. Keßler
CHAPTER 2
How much English do children know before they are exposed to instruction? Applying Processability Theory to receptive grammar	27
Gisela Håkansson
CHAPTER 3
Morpho-syntactic development in the input: A study of second language learning textbooks	51
Anna Flyman Mattsson
CHAPTER 4
Are speech and writing teachable? Re-examining developmental constraints on pedagogy	71
Bronwen Dyson

Part II. Methods and assessment

CHAPTER 5

- The elicitation of oral language production data: An exploration of the
Elicited Imitation Task 97
Kristof Baten

CHAPTER 6

- Elicited imitation as a diagnostic tool of morpho-syntactic processing 119
Jacopo Saturno

CHAPTER 7

- Grammatical accuracy and complexity in a speaking proficiency test 137
Anders Agebjörn

Part III. Cross-linguistic aspects of SLA

CHAPTER 8

- Acquisition of nominal morphology in Norwegian L2: Trends and tendencies 163
Linda Evenstad Emilsen

CHAPTER 9

- Interlingual versus intralingual tendencies in second language acquisition:
Expressing motion events in English, Hungarian and Japanese 183
Miho Mano, Yuko Yoshinari and Kiyoko Eguchi

CHAPTER 10

- The acquisition of Turkish (genitive-)possessive structures by adult
Norwegian learners 205
Emel Türker-van der Heiden and Gözde Mercan

Closing chapter: Opening new perspectivesCHAPTER 11*Heritage language development and the promise of Processability Theory 237Silvina MontrulSubject index 261