

CONTENTS

List of illustrations x

Acknowledgements xiv

Introduction 1

Between centre and periphery 3

Domestication networks 4

Framework 6

Structure 7

1 Origins and networks 14

Origins of the New Typography 14

The international spread of words-in-freedom 15

An abstract language of form 18

Constructivism in Germany 19

Scandinavian nodes in the avant-garde network 22

Georg Pauli's Flamman 24

Flamman's typography 25

The New Student Society's publications 31

The New Student Society and constructivism 32

Conclusion 37

PART I Printing and advertising cultures 41

2 Modification: The printing trade's versions of the New Typography 43

The New Typography from avant-garde to printing trade 44

Tschichold's elemental typography 47

Reception in the German printing trade 50

International spread through type samples 52

Reception in the Scandinavian printing trade 54

- The New Typography in Scandinavian printing education 57
 - Trade journals 58
 - A modified form of New Typography in Hugo Lagerström's publications 58
 - Reflecting modifications in practice: Norsk Boktrykk Kalender 64
 - Scandinavianism and typographic compromise: Grafisk Revy 67
 - Educational societies 68
 - The Graphic Society of Oslo 69
 - The Compositors' Technical Cooperative in Copenhagen 70
 - Trade schools 74
 - The School for Book Craft in Stockholm 76
 - The Trade School for Book Craft in Copenhagen 80
 - Putting the New Typography on the curriculum 83
- Conclusion 86

3 Compartmentalization: Cultures and practices of advertising 93

- Jobbing print, commercial art and layout 94
 - Between American and German advertising cultures 96
- Discrete professional communication networks 99
 - The Scandinavian advertising journal network 100
 - The shock of Modern Publicity and Mise en Page 102
- Competing cultures of design and production 107
 - The jobbing printer 107
 - The typographic ad 108
 - The typographic poster 110
 - The 'small poster' 113
 - The commercial artist 114
 - Resistance towards photography 116
 - The lay-out man 119
 - Typophoto between professions 121
 - The conflict between compositors and lay-out men 125
- Conclusion 127

PART II Printing and society 135

4 Realignment: Functionalism as ideology, style and resistance 137

- From elementarism to functionalism 138
 - The Stockholm Exhibition 1930 as catalyst for functionalist typography 141
- From funkis to functional typography 146
 - The term 'funkis' and its changing connotations 146
 - Funkis* typography in practice 148
 - The economic case for funkis 151
 - Functional typography 152
- Towards the functional book 154

- Anders Billow's view of the functionalist book 154
 - Building books for the photographic image 157
- The book and the functional tradition 160
 - Knud V. Engelhardt as pioneer of the functional tradition 161
 - Typification in Steen Eiler Rasmussen's Britisk Brugskunst 163
- Reading machines and books for everyday use 166
 - The book for everyday use 169

Conclusion 172

5 Isolation: Future-people and rational consumers 180

- The Swedish Cooperative Society: Adopter of 'wild' New Typography 181
 - The Cooperative Society's advertisements 183
- Print designs of the avant-garde left 186
 - The journal Spektrum between printers 187
 - Vilhelm Bjerke Petersen: Client at Nordlunde's printing house 189
 - The Monde Group: Practitioners of 'wild' photomontage 193
 - From 'horror vacui' compositions to didactic photomontage 195
- Targeting the young and female vote through 'wild' photomontage 199
 - Kaj Andersson's Morgonbris 200
 - The Norwegian Labour Party's response to Nazi propaganda 205
 - The photographic poster enters mainstream political culture 207
- Conclusion 211

6 Assimilation 217

- The New Typography under occupation 217
 - Occupied Norway 218
 - Occupied Denmark 219
- A new style in neutral Sweden 223
 - Tradition and progress 225
- Conclusion 227

Conclusion 230

Glossary 233

Index 250