

Is it possible to strive for autonomy and diversity in society without weakening the common good?

How much autonomy and diversity are possible without destroying social cohesion and human solidarity?

And how much social commonality is necessary to be able to live an autonomous life and do justice to diversity?