

Julia D. Lindenlaub examines how the Gospel of John's preoccupation with its own status as a written text mimics esteem for authoritative scriptural texts in ancient Judaism. The gospel's creative representation of its authorship in the form of the »Beloved Disciple« invokes a deliberate correspondence between scripture and gospel that motivates its emphatic textuality.