

Contents

Acknowledgements	viii
Introduction	1
1 The origins of the war on terror and the myth of President George W. Bush's foreign policy revolution	7
2 Framing the threat of new terrorism: the invention of US terrorism discourse and President Clinton's counterterrorism approach	27
3 Conceptualising terrorist attacks: metaphors, frames and President Clinton's counterterrorism initiatives	53
4 Framing the threat of rogue states: Iraq, Iran and Clinton's dual-containment approach to Middle East peace	83
5 Writing American national identity: narratives and the social construction of terrorism as a negative ideograph	115
6 Rethinking the discursive construction of terrorism and counterterrorism: theoretical reflections and implications	145
Conclusion	166
Index	170