Table of contents

Acknowledgements VII

The future of historical sociolinguistics? 1
Tanja Säily, Arja Nurmi, Minna Palander-Collin & Anita Auer

Part I. Methodological innovations

Exploring part-of-speech frequencies in a sociohistorical corpus of English 23
Tanja Säily, Turo Vartiainen & Harri Siirtola

Reading into the past: Materials and methods in historical semantics research 53
Susan Fitzmaurice, Justyna A. Robinson, Marc Alexander, Iona C. Hine, Seth Mehl & Fraser Dallachy

Ireland in British parliamentary debates 1803–2005: Plotting changes in discourse in a large volume of time-series corpus data 83
Helen Baker, Vaclav Brezina & Tony McEnery

Discord in eighteenth-century genteel correspondence 109
Minna Nevala & Anni Sairio

Part II. New data for historical sociolinguistic research

Competing norms and standards: Methodological triangulation in the study of language planning in nineteenth-century Finland 131
Taru Nordlund & Ritva Pallaskallio

Relativisation in Dutch diaries, private letters and newspapers (1770–1840): A genre-specific national language? 157
Andreas Krogull, Gijsbert Rutten & Marijke van der Wal

"A graphic system which leads its own linguistic life"? Epistolary spelling in English, 1400–1800 187
Samuli Kaislaniemi, Mel Evans, Teo Juvonen & Anni Sairio

Part III. Theory: Bridging gaps, new challenges

Historical sociolinguistics and construction grammar: From mutual challenges to mutual benefits 217
Martin Hilpert

A lost Canadian dialect: The Ottawa Valley 1975–2013 239
Bridget L. Jankowski & Sali A. Tagliamonte

"Vernacular universals" in nineteenth-century grammar writing 275
Lieselotte Anderwald

Revisiting weak ties: Using present-day social media data in variationist studies 303
Mikko Laitinen, Jonas Lundberg, Magnus Levin & Alexander Lakaw

Index 327